Ross Range Farm is an early 19th century frame structure, five bays long and one deep. It is one and one-half storys tall with a one story addition on the south side. Similar to several houses in the County, it actually has two parts, composed of a three bay long portion with chimney on both ends and the two bay portion, built all the same height, but the window in the latter is not as tall as those in the former section. There are two dormers on the roof of the major section and one above what was originally the kitchen. It would have looked similar to the ruined house down the neck on Back Creek and Hudson's Delight.
